A Farmer, His Son And Their Mule

Synopsis

Have you ever made a decision about something and more than one person decides to give you their advice and things do not turn out the way you expected? That's exactly what happens when the Farmer and his son who are happy about taking their mule to the market to sell for school clothes. They are so excited they sing a song on their way to keep up their morale. One person after the other gives the farmer their opinion on how the farmer and his son should ride the mule. Their song never changes but they try to please everyone who offers them advice. They learn in the end that you can please some of the people some of the time but you can't please all of the people all of the time. PROVERBS 25:11 Like apples of gold in setting of silver is a word spoken in right circumstances. NASB

When a much-loved tale comes alive in the voice of a storyteller, the differences are immediately apparent. There is a cadence to the language of this small beauty, a reach for the child's listening focus that is matched by the lively sketches accompanying each page. I buy a great many books for children and was happy to stumble into this one. It is both fable and tale, a children's world of where small truths come alive and right action hurts no one. It's a gem.

An exciting, fun, interactive book for children! The illustrations and story were inviting and an easy read for young children. The author did a phenomenal job in creating a story that also can lead to fun and creative theatrics and classroom discussion. I recommend this book for youth group, schools and bed time stories for families.

Thumbs up to Mrs Frasier Dasent for the adorable book. I read it out loud to my 6 year old niece who loved it, especially the call and response parts. Looking forward to more books by Auntie Jo Jo!!
